The Daily Quote

"The core issues of [the health care reform] debate have been settled. The Congressional Budget Office has swept away the major arguments that opponents of reform have been trying to make. The bill before the Senate would cut the deficit, not increase it, and would stabilize or reduce health-care premiums for most people, not raise them. The proposal contains serious cost-control measures that can be built on over time. Passing health-care reform is thus not only morally necessary but also fiscally responsible."

- E.J. Dionne, Washington Post, 12/7/09
